This work, dealing with the fundamental problems of philosophy, is divided into three books. The first is concerned with the general problems of Knowledge, including the nature of Belief, the meaning of Laws of Thought, Truth, and Reality, etc. The second deals with special aspects of the Universe as known, including the qualitative and quantitative aspects, Causation, the chief modes of Unity, Value, Freedom, and Personality. The third deals with the Universe as a whole, with special reference to the possibility of regarding it as a Cosmos or perfect Order. In connection with this, the problems of Contingency, Change, Evil, Infinity, and the relations between Time and Eternity, are discussed.
